Description: Proofing the Class Schedule with Schedule Helper - Class schedule development – do you wonder what your schedule will look like, but the proof from the typesetter doesn’t arrive for weeks? Or do you typeset your own schedule, but the managers in your school’s departments want to know what their schedule will look like, right now, but you don’t have that many licenses for QuarkXPress and can’t distribute paper copies fast enough? Enter Schedule Helper. It’s a tool that pulls schedule data from Banner, and lays it out in Microsoft Word just the way it shows up in the printed schedule. It’s easy enough that anyone can use it to

2005 3CBG Conference Session Schedule

proofread their schedule. It can even be used to quickly produce fliers for new classes, or a set of classes that a division wants to advertise more heavily. If you could use a tool like this, then attend this presentation to find out how it works, and how you can make it work for you!

Automating the Printed Schedule - Antelope Valley College has automated the generation of the printed class schedule cutting several weeks from the production process. A PL/SQL script added to JobSub allows the scheduling staff to generate the schedule at their convenience. The script emails the user a text file marked-up with Adobe PageMaker tags (similar to HTML tags). The text file is imported into a PageMaker template, which renders the tags with the appropriate font, text size, text style, and tabulation.

Chabot/Las Positas also wrote their own without any affiliation with CAPP. This form was developed as a simple on-line SEP form to replace a physical paper form. It provides counselors with an on-line way to schedule courses for up to 6 terms. It tracks general education courses under the appropriate general education category (i.e. AA/AS, CSU, IGETC) by way of an attribute code. Allows for multiple SEPs and keeps historical records of prior SEPs.
